

988 will be available on July 16.

People are supportive of policies to improve crisis response.

89%

agree that everyone, regardless of location or income, deserves access to quality mental health crisis responses and care

86%

believe that when someone is in a mental health or suicide crisis, they should receive a mental health response – not a police response

91%

support creating 24/7 mental health, alcohol/drug, and suicide crisis call centers that can respond effectively to callers and follow-up later

89%

agree that there must be an alternative to going to an emergency room during a mental health crisis

88%

support requiring all health insurers to cover mental health crisis services

79%

agree that more federal funding is needed to support mental health crisis services

77%

are willing to pay some amount on their monthly phone bills to sustainably fund their state's crisis system after hearing that this is similar to how 911 is funded today

People agree that crisis response must be improved for:

People experiencing homelessness

People with low incomes

Young people

People of color

LGBTQ people

The survey was conducted by Ipsos using their online, probability-based KnowledgePanel®, of among the American general population (ages 18+). Interview dates: May 20-22, 2022. Number of interviews: 2,045. Margin of error: +/-2.3 percentage points at the 95% confidence level.

REIMAGINE
Crisis Response

Learn more and get involved at ReimagineCrisis.org